Power, the Press and the Technology of Freedom: The Coming Age of ISDN (Focus on Issues) Leonard R. Sussman
Written for the general reader, this book focuses on public affairs (power), the press, communications technology, and human freedom. In warning that today's idea-controls must first be eliminated, the author provides 82 forms of censorship and self-censorship, and ways journalists, in turn, prod government officials, analyses of the state/press struggle in 88 countries, a first-of-its-kind survey of correspondents in 74 countries who respond to 200 questions on how news media really function world-wide, and scores of concrete recommendations for removing today's censorship and opening the age of information freedom. The book foresees the democratizing potentials of the new communications technologies. ISDN (Integrated Systems of Digital Networks) will provide the world-wide network of networksóprint, broadcast, picture, data, marketing, banking, encyclopedic, electronic mail and other servicesóall on a single terminal at home or office, linked by telephone on a fiber optic thread.
