The planet Tatooine is coming to an end. The ex-rulers, the Hutts, disappeared gone long ago, and now the new rulers are looking to save their planet at any cost. In order to achieve this, they need a great amount of water. Their leader, Captain Galleon, intends to kidnap a senior official from the planet Coruscant. At the same time, 14-year-old Memorian Karaman – aka Memo, a humanoid alien from Coruscant – accidentally falls through an intergalactic portal that takes him on board a spaceship to Earth. Memo has the gift to manipulate the minds of all living beings, including plants, through the power of his mind, but he has had absolutely zero involvement in the evil plan of Captain Galleon. Memo could move objects with his mind, using the Force, but he has a weakness; he has no influence, either mentally or physically, on Earth's water. Separated from his ship, Memo cannot survive on our planet, but thankfully another boy comes to the rescue. This is Ethan White, aka Skywalker – a nine-year-old boy from Earth. So, the adventure begins, and it will take us to the first Jedi Knights and the emergence of the Force in the galaxy.....

A baby boy felt a tickle and immediately turned around, but behind him there was nothing and nobody. Again, some invisible force had tickled him, making him laugh. Maybe because the window was slightly open and the wind that rippled the silken curtain was playing with the child, he waddled like a little duck toward the window. Thousands of lights in the night sky attracted the boy's curiosity.

The child's mother, who was sleeping peacefully in the next room woke up and opened her eyes.

A computer-generated voice called out loudly when the lights in the bedroom began to gradually illuminate the room. "Ms Dalma, Kolumar has left the room and came out on the balcony," the computer said.

The woman—Dalma by name, mechanically got out of bed. She grabbed the robe by her bed and slipped it on her naked body.

"There is another carnival procession, tonight?" she asked calmly.

The boy was standing on the balcony, holding the railing, watching the night life that moved everywhere in the city below. All vehicles flying in the night sky over the capital were required, according to protocol, to turn on flashing lights from all directions, and that further illuminated the area even in the sky.

A single light stood out from the others and began to approach the child. Kolumar initially ignored it, but now the boy began to watch with profound interest. His mother came into his room and went to the balcony. Then she screamed.

A monstrous robot-lantern had taken her child with its mechanical claws.

The woman did not know what to do, but she was ready to do anything to save her baby child. Without really thinking about it, she ran and jumped off the balcony onto the flying robot that had just taken off. Her robe flew open and out behind her bare body. Dalma took the opportunity to jump towards the child with outstretched hands, but she missed her target and fell down off the balcony.

The machine was obviously programmed to keep her child at any cost. Against the night sky, the round robot-lantern which was normally visible from a distance, now turned off all of its lights. The robot-lantern was almost impossible to be seen, flying through the sky above the city. The robot emitted a faint blue glow of gas which within seconds put the abducted Coruscantian child into a deep sleep.

Desperate and doomed, the woman looked down at the dazzling city lights. She should have been frightened of falling into the darkness, but Dalma thought only of Kolumar and it fortified her both physically and mentally.

Someone had alerted the Royal Guard patrol about the woman falling from the sky who had surely perished.

Although narrowly missing a couple of cars flying over the city, Dalma had spread wide all twelve fingers of her hands and was ready to grasp anything flying below her.....
