Before the Big O: Professional Organizers Talk about Life before Organizing Regina Lark
Professional organizers seems to be born, not made. Before we joined the ranks of NAPO the people who call themselves "professional organizers" were educated in other careers, had jobs they loved or hated but left for various reasons. We seem to have always had the knack for organizing (although our clients call it our "gift") but truly and really, not one among us thought about turning Professional Organizing into a full or part-time career. And, sometimes, suddenly or with a lot of thought, a recession happens, a new family is started, a parent dies ... and these experiences plant seeds of change. As it is often at these critical junctures, that a professional organizer is born. So join us on our journey - before the Big O - and read our stories about how Professional Organizers got here. This book is written for the person who has the gift of organizing but isn't sure where to turn to hone and apply that gift.
